The screenshot shows the GitHub Desktop application interface. A large green callout bubble with a blue border and arrow points from the left towards the 'Choose a branch to merge into' button at the bottom of the main window. The main window displays a list of branches under the 'Winter2022' repository. The 'Default Branch' section shows 'Winter2022' was last updated 5 days ago. The 'Other Branches' section lists several branches like 'origin/Winter2020', 'origin/master', etc., with their last update times. At the bottom, there's a summary for a commit, a 'Commit to Winter2022' button, and a 'Choose a branch to merge into Winter2022' dropdown menu. The status bar at the top right shows the date and time: 'Wed Feb 23 12:24 PM'. The Mac OS X Dock at the bottom is visible, showing various application icons.

The GitHub Desktop application window is open, showing the repository `mcc_tools_tech` and the branch `Winter2022`. A message at the top indicates an update is available. The main pane shows a single changed file, `Week04-Tours/Homework/Elizabeth Harris - Homework (week 4).pptx`, which is highlighted with a blue selection bar. A large green callout bubble points from the bottom right towards this file, containing the text: "The new file now appears on your GitHub desktop." To the right of the file, there are two links: "This binary file has changed." and "Open file in external program.". At the bottom of the window, there is a commit message input field with the placeholder "Create Elizabeth Harris - Homework (week 4).pptx" and a "Commit to Winter2022" button.

An updated version of GitHub Desktop is available and will be installed at the next launch. See what's new or restart GitHub Desktop.
